THIS MONTH'S TOPIC...

California: On the Front Lines of Identity Theft

Notes from our Chairman, Adam K. Levin

When California Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger declared war on identity theft in 2006, we didn't take his declaration lightly. After all, the state of California is legendary for its pioneering spirit in forging consumer-friendly legislation—and lawmakers and consumer groups have largely worked to uphold that reputation in their efforts to combat identity theft and protect citizens' privacy from the ever-constant threat of data breaches.

Despite its solidly pro-consumer stance, all is not well in the Golden State. From troubles with undocumented worker fraud to financial identity crimes, California law enforcement agencies face a diverse array of adversaries in their war against identity theft. In this month's newsletter, we examine these challenges as well as the state's legislative response to them. The resulting report, we hope, will be useful not just for consumers, investigators and policymakers in California, but for those in any state wishing to curb the identity theft epidemic.
